Mud-brick construction is also known, and it seems likely that Greek merchants were trading goods and expertise for agricultural produce. Despite this, however, Roman Gaul and Germany will be laying stress on the cultural unity of the region in ancient times. Caesar's problems were compounded by the vacillation and then defec- tion of the Aedui.

He was an effective leader of the army in Gaul and chose skilled officers to serve with him, such as Sulla and Sertorius. Local imitations appeared from the second century, for instance the silver coins of the Volcae Tectosages, which took the coins of the Greek colony of Rhode in Catalonia as their prototype. The main period of the site dates from the sixth to fifth centuries, during which appreciable numbers of amphorae and Massaliote pots were brought in.

British colleagues have also given me a great deal of advice, both in discussion. Sources on this matter give some very interesting information.
