I thought the 'Rear Window' part of the story with Dont Close Your Eyes and her curtain twitching was fascinating, we all probably notice what our neighbours do along with any changes in their routine and I can imagine how interesting and comforting it could become for someone like agoraphobic Robin to spend so much time 'spying' on her neighbours and then wanting to help when realising they were in trouble. I highly recommend this book to everyone who loves fabulously written psychological suspense.

Well, let me tell you I could not stop reading until I finished the book. All very different, Callum, is withdrawn, timid and obsequiously polite to his bullying father, Drew. This in turn brings up emotions from her past that she clearly hasn't dealt .
