I produced one cartoon book, "Flatulent Tales; the Adventures of Gilbert the Farting Mouse" as an entertainer for the age group. But I couldn't help myself.

Brazilian band Pato Fu did the same for an album aptly titled "Toy Music". They also have The Marble Machine watch herewhich is a hand-cranked analog computer that plays a xylophone, drum kit, and guitar by dropping ball bearings on. Half of that year's album, aptly titled Construction Time Againconsisted of samples of random stuff being hit or dropped.

A neat little kit set in a library, with Miss Piggy, Fozzie, Gonzo, and compar Dot matrix printer heads can be used to make music. A detailed schematic of the instrument is supplied in the liner notes for their eponymous album, as well as a breakdown of the drummers equally impressive drum kit. A short has Wakko performing the "Blue Danube" using belches.

This New Zealand-produced advert selling insecticide for farmers. As a New Lumpball Lights the Lights: This is most exemplified on her album, Ellipseas well as her Heapsongs project, which included extensive sound- and image-sourcing from her fans, primarily for the song "Lifeline".
