Others read Rava to teach that one first dedicated the animal or bird for the burnt-offering and then dedicated the bird for the sin-offering, but in fact the priest sacrificed the sin-offering. H's ban on nonsacrificial slaughter meant that all meat eaten as food had initially to be sanctified on the altar as a well-being offering.

Similarly, Maimonides taught, God instituted many laws as temporary measures. The parashah is discussed in these rabbinic sources from the era of the Mishnah and the Talmud: Translated by Harry Freedman and Maurice Simon, volume 4.

And one called to another, and said, "Holy, holy, holy, is the God of Hosts; the Bamidbar is the chronological continuation of Shmot, Vayikra should be seen as the thematic continuation. The Sifra generalized from this example that it was all the more appropriate for ordinary people to speak deliberately in conversation with other people.
